Accepting Constructive Criticism

The wise man once said, “If you ignore criticism, you will end in poverty and disgrace; if you accept correction, you will be honored.” One of the hardest things to train ourselves to do, is to accept constructive criticism. Our initial reaction is often to become defensive rather than heed the advice of another. This can be especially true when that criticism comes at an unexpected time, or by an unexpected individual. The fact is, if you show me a successful individual, I will show you an individual who is good at accepting constructive criticism, and very possibly, an individual who is good at accepting ALL criticism.

One of the keys is to view all criticism as constructive. Whether it meant for good, or for harm, there is a lesson to be learned from criticism. Successful individuals learn that lesson. They adapt, they grow, and they become successful by not repeating the mistakes of the past. Criticism can come from a variety of places. It may come from a supervisor, a volunteer, a committee member, or from clientele. No matter the source, we should all listen to and learn from criticism and make adjustments as appropriate. A Wall Street Journal Article by Alina Dizik provides six tips to help you deal with criticism in an effective manner:

1) Take Time to Really Listen – Don’t dismiss the comments just because they are negative. Remember this is an opportunity to learn and improve, don’t tune it out.

2) Ask Questions – When criticism is involved, it is easy to misinterpret what is being said. Ask lots of follow-up questions to prevent a bigger misunderstanding or miscommunication.

3) Don’t Get Defensive – This is a natural reaction and an urge you must fight. Remember, the person telling you this might have a reasonable point, one you will miss if you are trying to think of ways to defend yourself.

4) Stay Calm – When you are being criticized, it is not time to lose your cool. Focus on the content of the message, and always think about how you can use this information in a positive way.

5) Determine if it is Accurate – Examine the information you have been given with an open mind. Talk to other co-workers or friends to see if you can determine the validity of the conversation rather than just dismissing it.
6) Address the Problem – When you demonstrate that you can accept the criticism and improve, your co-workers and supervisors will view you in high esteem. They will also know that they can be open and honest with you, which will provide you an opportunity to receive valuable feedback which will benefit you in the future.
